

EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS
COUR EUROPÉENNE DES DROITS DE L'HOMME

FOURTH SECTION

CASE OF POTOK v. POLAND

(Application no. 18683/04)

JUDGMENT

STRASBOURG

4 December 2012

FINAL

04/03/2013

This judgment has become final under Article 44 § 2 of the Convention. It may be subject to editorial revision.

In the case of Potok v. Poland,

The European Court of Human Rights (Fourth Section), sitting as a Chamber composed of:

Ineta Ziemele, President,

David Thór Björgvinsson,

Päivi Hirvelä,

Zdravka Kalaydjieva,

Vincent A. De Gaetano,

Paul Mahoney,

Krzysztof Wojtyczek, judges, and Fatoş Aracı, Deputy Section Registrar,

Having deliberated in private on 13 November 2012,

Delivers the following judgment, which was adopted on that date:

PROCEDURE

1. The case originated in an application (no. 18683/04) against the Republic of Poland lodged with the Court under Article 34 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms (“the Convention”) by a Polish national, Ms Ewa Potok (“the applicant”), on 13 May 2004.

2. The Polish Government (“the Government”) were represented by their Agent, Mr J. Wołasiewicz, succeeded by Ms J. Chrzanowska, of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

3. The applicant alleged, in particular, that the ex officio reopening of the social security proceedings concerning her right to an early-retirement pension, which resulted in the quashing of the final decision granting her a right to a pension, was in breach of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention.

4. On 20 May 2010 the application was communicated to the Government. It was also decided to rule on the admissibility and merits of the application at the same time (Article 29 § 1).

THE FACTS

I. THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE CASE

5. The applicant was born in 1961 and lives in Mielec.

6. The applicant is married and has two children. Prior to her application for an early-retirement pension she had been employed until April 1999 and paid social security contributions to the State.

A. Proceedings concerning the grant and revocation of the EWK pension

7. On 6 September 2001 the applicant filed an application with the Rzeszów Social Security Board (Zakład Ubezpieczeń Społecznych) to be granted the right to an early-retirement pension for persons raising children who, due to the seriousness of their health condition, required constant care, the so-called “EWK” pension”.

8. Along with her application for a pension, the applicant submitted, among other documents concerning her son’s health condition, a medical certificate issued by a specialist medical centre. The certificate stated that the child (born in 1992) suffered from allergy and asthma and that he had been in need of his parent’s constant care.

9. On 19 November 2001 the Rzeszów Social Security Board (“the SSB”) issued a decision granting the applicant the right to an early-retirement pension as of 1 November 2001 in the net amount of 788 Polish zlotys (PLN).

10. On 22 August 2002 Rzeszów Social Security Board asked the Main Social Security Board’s doctor (Główny Lekarz Orzecznik) to inform it whether the applicant’s son required the permanent care of a parent. On 30 August 2002 the doctor stated that, on the basis of the medical documents, the child could not be considered as ever having required such care.

11. On 4 September 2002 the Rzeszów Social Security Board issued simultaneously two decisions in respect of the applicant. By virtue of one decision, the payment of the applicant’s pension was discontinued with immediate effect. By virtue of the other decision, the Board reopened the proceedings, revoked the initial decision granting a pension and eventually refused to grant the applicant the right to an early-retirement pension under the scheme provided for by the Cabinet’s Ordinance of 15 May 1989 on the right to early retirement of employees raising children who require permanent care (Rozporządzenie Rady Ministrów z dn. 15 maja 1989 w sprawie uprawnień do wcześniejszej emerytury pracowników opiekujących się dziećmi wymagającymi stałej opieki) (“the 1989 Ordinance”).

12. The applicant appealed against the respective decisions divesting her of the right to an early-retirement pension. She submitted that she should receive the benefit because her child required constant care, as confirmed by the medical certificate attached to the applicant’s original application for a pension. Moreover, the applicant alleged that the revocation of her retirement pension was contrary to the principle of vested rights.

13. On 30 October 2003 the Rzeszow Regional Court dismissed the applicant’s appeal. The Regional Court concluded on the basis of the evidence, including a medical expert opinion, that while indeed the applicant’s child suffered from allergy and asthma he did not require his mother’s permanent care since her health condition did not significantly impair her bodily functions.

The domestic court held that the applicant had been rightfully divested of her right to a pension under the scheme provided by the 1989 Ordinance as she did not satisfy the requirement of necessary permanent care.

14. The applicant further appealed against the first-instance judgment.

15. On 31 March 2004 the Rzeszów Court of Appeal (Sąd Apelacyjny) dismissed the appeal.

16. The applicant did not lodge a cassation appeal with the Supreme Court.

B. The applicant's financial situation following the revocation of the EWK pension

17. Following the social security proceedings the applicant was not ordered to return her early-retirement benefits paid by the Social Security Board, despite the revocation of her right to an early-retirement pension.

18. The applicant submitted that after the revocation of the EWK pension she had not received any unemployment or other benefits from the State. She was also not able to find a job.

19. The Government submitted that the applicant had been unemployed since 1999. After the revocation of her EWK pension the applicant was covered by the social security scheme for farmers. She did not take up an employment. The applicant and her family owned a little farm.

20. In addition, the Government submitted information as regards the various types of social benefits available in Poland. However, they did not specify which of those benefits, if any, were available in the applicant's situation.

21. Under the relevant laws currently in force, it appears that the applicant will qualify for a regular retirement pension in 2021.

C. Other EWK cases pending before the Court

22. Some 130 applications arising from a similar fact pattern have been brought to the Court. The majority of the applicants form the Association of Victims of the SSB (Stowarzyszenie Osób Poszkodowanych przez ZUS) ("the Association"), an organisation monitoring the practices of the Social Security Board in Poland, in particular in the Podkarpacki region.

23. Out of all applications lodged with the Court, about twenty-four applicants decided not to lodge a cassation appeal against the judgment of the Court of Appeal given in their case.

24. One hundred-and-four applicants lodged cassation appeals against the final judgments given in their cases. The Supreme Court entertained and dismissed on the merits fifteen appeals. In eighty-one applications the Supreme Court refused to entertain cassation appeals on the ground that they did not raise any important legal issues or require the Supreme Court to give a new interpretation to legal provisions which raised serious doubts or gave rise to ambiguity in the jurisprudence of the domestic courts. In the remaining eight cases cassation appeals were rejected for failure to comply with various procedural requirements.

II. RELEVANT DOMESTIC LAW AND PRACTICE

A. Social security system

25. The legal provisions applicable at the material time and questions of practice are set out in the judgment in the case of Moskal v. Poland, no. 10373/05, § 31-34, 15 September 2009.

26. The social security scheme for farmers is regulated by the Farmers' Social Security Act of 20 December 1990 ("the 1990 Act"; ustawa o ubezpieczeniu społecznym rolników).

27. The reopening of the proceedings concerning the early-retirement pension is regulated in section 114 (1) of the Law of 17 December 1998 on retirement and disability pensions paid from the Social Insurance Fund (Ustawa o emeryturach i rentach z Funduszu Ubezpieczeń Społecznych) ("the 1998 Law"), which at the relevant time read as follows:

"The right to benefits or the amount of benefits will be re-assessed upon application by the person concerned or, ex officio, if, after the validation of the decision concerning benefits, new evidence is submitted or circumstances which had existed before issuing the decision and which have an impact on the right to benefits or on their amount are discovered."

On 1 July 2004 a new subparagraph 114 (1) (a) was added, which reads as follows:

"Section 1 shall apply respectively, if, after the validation of the decision it is discovered that the evidence that had been submitted did not give the right to a pension, disability pension or its amount."

B. Cassation appeal

28. A party to civil proceedings could, at the material time, lodge a cassation appeal with the Supreme Court against a judicial decision of a second-instance court. A party had to be represented by an advocate or a legal adviser.

29. Article 393¹ of the Code of Civil Procedure as applicable at the material time listed the grounds on which a cassation appeal could be lodged. It read as follows:

"The cassation appeal may be based on the following grounds:

1) a breach of substantive law as a result of its erroneous interpretation or wrongful application;

2) a breach of procedural provisions, if that defect could significantly affect the outcome of the case.”

30. Pursuant to Article 393¹³ the Supreme Court, having allowed a cassation appeal, could quash the challenged judgment in its entirety or in part and remit the case for re-examination. Where the Supreme Court failed to find non-conformity with the law, it dismissed the cassation appeal. According to Article 393¹⁵ if the cassation appeal was well-founded the Supreme Court could also amend the impugned judgment and adjudicate on the merits.

C. Constitutional Court’s judgment

1. Judgment no. K 18/99

31. On 22 June 1999 the Ombudsman made an application to the Constitutional Court, asking for section 186 § 3 of the Law of 17 December 1998 on retirement and disability pensions paid from the Social Insurance Fund (Ustawa o emeryturach i rentach z Funduszu Ubezpieczeń Społecznych) (“the 1998 Law”) to be declared unconstitutional in so far as it restricted the application of the 1989 Ordinance to persons born before 1 January 1949. More specifically, the Ombudsman submitted that the introduction of an age-limit in respect of persons taking care of a child, which in essence amounted to a deprivation of the right to a benefit, constituted a violation of the principle of equality set forth in Article 32 § 1 of the Constitution.

32. On 4 January 2000 the Constitutional Court (K18/99) declared the impugned section 186 § 3 of the 1998 Law unconstitutional in so far as it restricted the application of the 1989 Ordinance to persons born before 1 January 1949. The Constitutional Court reiterated among other things the constitutional principle of acquired rights which guarantees particularly strong protection for the right to receive social welfare benefits.

2. Judgment no. K5/11

33. On 10 February 2011 the Ombudsman made an application to the Constitutional Court, asking for section 114 (1)(a) of the 1998 Law to be declared unconstitutional in so far as it allowed the SSB to reopen ex officio proceedings relating to the grant of a pension or a disability pension on the basis of a new assessment of evidence which had already been submitted.

34. On 28 February 2012 the Constitutional Court (K5/11) declared the impugned section 114 (1)(a) of the 1998 Law unconstitutional in so far as it allowed the SSB to reopen such proceedings following a new assessment of evidence which had already been submitted.

THE LAW

I. ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 1 OF PROTOCOL No. 1 TO THE CONVENTION

35. The applicant complained that divesting her, in the circumstances of the case, of her acquired right to an early-retirement pension amounted to an unjustified deprivation of property. The complaint falls to be examined under Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention, which reads as follows:

“Every natural or legal person is entitled to the peaceful enjoyment of her possessions. No one shall be deprived of her possessions except in the public interest and subject to the conditions provided for by law and by the general principles of international law.

The preceding provisions shall not, however, in any way impair the right of a State to enforce such laws as it deems necessary to control the use of property in accordance with the general interest or to secure the payment of taxes or other contributions or penalties.”

A. Admissibility

1. The Government's preliminary objection on non-exhaustion of domestic remedies

(a) The parties' submissions

36. The Government firstly submitted that the applicant had not exhausted the remedies available under Polish law in that she had not lodged a cassation appeal with the Supreme Court. They argued that the cassation appeal should be considered an effective and available remedy for the EWK cases. The Government referred to some examples of domestic case-law. In particular, they pointed to a case in which a cassation appeal had been allowed by the Supreme Court which had then remitted it to the Court of Appeal. Afterwards the applicant's appeals against the SSB's decision had again been rejected at two instances and, finally, the Supreme Court had refused to entertain the second cassation appeal lodged in the case. The Government failed to indicate the grounds invoked by the Supreme Court for quashing the judgment when it examined the cassation appeal for the first time.

37. They further submitted that the applicant should have made an application to the Constitutional Court challenging the compatibility of the relevant social security provisions with the Constitution. They relied on a judgment delivered by the Constitutional Court on 4 January 2000 (see paragraphs 31 and 32 above).

38. In their most recent submissions, the Government referred to the Constitutional Court's judgment of 28 February 2012 (see paragraph 34 above). They maintained that even though the decisions issued in the EWK cases had been based on section 114 (1) of the 1998 Law and not on section 114 (1)(a), the applicant should nevertheless have availed herself of the possibility of lodging a constitutional complaint.

39. The applicant contested the objection and considered that she had exhausted all available remedies.

(b) The Court's assessment

(i) Cassation appeal

40. The Court notes that there were essentially two types of decisions terminating the proceedings in the EWK cases. First, in all cases where the applicants lodged cassation appeals in accordance with the procedural requirements, the Supreme Court either examined them on the merits as in Moskal (cited above, § 24) or decided not to entertain them. Second, in cases where the applicants, as in the present case, desisted from lodging cassation appeals the final decisions were those given by the courts of appeal.

41. Analysing the applications brought to the Court concerning the same subject-matter it is noticeable that only fifteen cassation appeals were examined on the merits by the Supreme Court. Moreover, they were all dismissed. The Supreme Court refused to entertain eighty-one correctly lodged cassation appeals seeing no ground justifying their examination on the merits (see paragraph 24 above). Twenty-four applicants did not attempt to lodge a cassation appeal claiming that the practice of the Supreme Court showed that this remedy had no prospects of success (see paragraph 23 above).

42. The Court considers that there was a consistent line of jurisprudence of the regional and appellate courts in cases where an EWK pension was revoked after the SSB's doctor had re-assessed the file and concluded that the child's illness had not been such as to require the parent's constant care within the meaning of the domestic law. The Supreme Court in principle endorsed this approach by refusing to examine on the merits cassation appeals in the great majority of cases. Moreover, the Government did not refer to any examples of cases in which the Supreme Court had allowed a cassation appeal and reversed the previous judgments by granting the EWK pension.

43. The applicant in the case under consideration appealed against the SSB's decision to the regional and later to the appellate court. The core of her appeals was the allegedly incorrect assessment by the SSB's doctor that the child had not required the applicant parent's constant care and the court's conclusion that the EWK pension had been correctly revoked. There is no appearance that she raised any particular complaint of a breach of procedure or law that would justify lodging a cassation appeal (see paragraph 29 above). The Court therefore accepts that, in the particular circumstances of the present case, the applicant was not required to avail herself of that remedy (see Kleyn and Others v. the Netherlands [GC], nos. 39343/98, 39651/98, 43147/98 and 46664/99, § 156, ECHR 2003-VI).

44. In the light of the above, the Court finds that in the particular circumstances of the case the applicant should be considered to have been dispensed from appealing to the Supreme Court in her case.

(ii) Constitutional complaint

45. The Court reiterates that it has already held that in Poland a constitutional complaint was an effective remedy for the purposes of Article 35 § 1 of the Convention only in situations where the alleged violation of the Convention resulted from the direct application of a legal provision considered by the complainant to be unconstitutional (see, among other authorities, Szott-Medyńska v. Poland (dec.), no. 47414/99, 9 October 2003).

46. Furthermore, Article 35 of the Convention, which sets out the rule on exhaustion of domestic remedies, provides for a distribution of the burden of proof. It is incumbent on the Government claiming non-exhaustion to satisfy the Court that the remedy was an effective one available not only in theory but also in practice at the relevant time, that is to say that it was accessible, was capable of providing redress in respect of the applicant's complaints, and offered reasonable prospects of success (see Selmouni v. France [GC], no. 25803/94, § 76, ECHR 1999-V, and Mifsud v. France (dec.), no. 57220/00, § 15, ECHR 2002-VIII).

47. In so far as the Government referred to the Constitutional Court's judgment of 4 January 2000, the Court observes that the Government failed to indicate which provision of the 1998 Law should have been challenged by the applicant before the Constitutional Court. They have merely stated that the applicant could have contested "the relevant social security provisions" without specifying any constitutional provision that could have been relied on in the applicant's situation. Furthermore, they have not adduced any relevant case-law of the Constitutional Court which would have demonstrated that such complaint, in the circumstances of the applicant's case, offered any prospects of success.

48. As regards the second limb of the Government's objection, the Court observes that, as the Government have acknowledged, section 114(1)(a) of the 1998 Law was not applicable in the present case. The SSB's decision to reopen the proceedings concerning the relevant benefit was based on section 114(1) (see paragraphs 34 and 37 above). While it is true that the Ombudsman's application was successful (see paragraph 34 above), this does not of itself indicate that a hypothetical complaint lodged by the applicant would have had a similar effect. Moreover, it should be noted that the Ombudsman's challenge was examined nearly ten years after the events complained of in the present case. In reality, the Government's objection is based on a theoretical and retrospective, and therefore highly speculative, comparison between the applicant's situation at the material time and recent developments in the Constitutional Court's case-law.

49. In consequence, the Court considers that in the present case a constitutional complaint cannot be considered with a sufficient degree of certainty to have been a remedy offering reasonable prospects of success.

For these reasons, the Government's plea of inadmissibility on the ground of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies must be dismissed.

2. Conclusion on admissibility

50. The Court also notes that this complaint is not manifestly ill-founded within the meaning of Article 35 § 3 (a) of the Convention. It further notes that it is not inadmissible on any other grounds. It must therefore be declared admissible.

B. Merits

1. The parties' submissions

(a) The applicant

51. The applicant submitted that divesting her, in the circumstances of the case, of her acquired right to an early-retirement pension had amounted to an unjustified deprivation of property.

52. In the applicant's view, there was no reasonable relationship of proportionality between the interference and the interests pursued. She had quit her employment in order to take care of her sick child. The special measures taken by the Government in the Podkarpacki region had no relevance for her professional situation, in view of her age and education. For these reasons it had been impossible for her to find a job for over four years.

53. The applicant also claimed that she had borne an excessive burden in that the decision of 4 September 2002 had deprived her of her only source of income with immediate effect.

(b) The Government

54. The Government claimed that the interference with the applicant's property rights had been lawful and justified. In particular, divesting the applicant of her right to the early-retirement pension had been provided for by law and was in the public interest. There was also a reasonable relationship of proportionality between the interference and the interests pursued. In the Polish social security system only retirement pensions granted under the general scheme, were, in principle, permanent and irrevocable. All other benefits based on conditions subject to change were subject to verification and possible revocation.

55. They further noted that even though the decision to revoke the EWK pension had a retroactive effect, the applicant had not been required to reimburse the sum of PLN 7,800.

2. The Court's assessment

(a) General principles

56. The relevant general principles are set out in the Moskal judgment, cited above, paragraphs 49-52. The Court would nevertheless reiterate that any interference by a public authority with the peaceful enjoyment of possessions should be lawful and must pursue a legitimate aim by means reasonably proportionate to the aim sought to be realised (see Moskal, cited above, §§ 49 and 50).

(b) Application of the above principles to the present case

(i) Whether there has been an interference with the applicant's possessions

57. The parties agreed that the decisions of the Rzeszów Social Security Board of 27 May 2002, subsequently validated by two court instances (the regional court and the court of appeal), which deprived the applicant of the right to receive the EWK pension, amounted to an interference with her possessions within the meaning of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention. The Court sees no reason to hold otherwise.

(ii) Lawfulness of the interference and legitimate aim

58. As in the Moskal case the Court considers that this interference was provided for by law and pursued a legitimate aim, as required by Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention (see Moskal, cited above, §§ 56, 57, 61-63 and also Iwaszkiewicz v. Poland, no. 30614/06, §§ 47, 48, 26 July 2011).

(iii) Proportionality

59. In the instant case, a property right was generated by the favourable evaluation of the applicant's dossier attached to her application for a pension, which was lodged in good faith, and by the Social Security Board's recognition of the right (see paragraphs 8 and 9 above). Before being invalidated the decision of 29 January 2001 had undoubtedly produced effects for the applicant and her family.

60. It must be stressed that the delay with which the authorities reviewed the applicant's dossier was relatively long. The 2001 decision was left in force for over nine months before the authorities became aware of their error. On the other hand, as soon as the error was discovered the decision to discontinue the payment of the benefit was issued relatively quickly and with immediate effect (see paragraphs 10 and 11 above). Even though the applicant had an opportunity to challenge the Social Security Board's decision of 4 September 2002 in judicial review proceedings, her right to the pension was determined by the courts almost eighteen months later and during that time she was not in receipt of any welfare benefit (see paragraphs 11-20 above).

61. In examining the conformity of these events with the Convention, the Court reiterates the particular importance of the principle of good governance. It requires that where an issue pertaining to the general interest is at stake, especially when it affects fundamental human rights, including property rights, the public authorities must act promptly and in an appropriate and above all consistent manner (see Beyeler v. Italy [GC], no. 33202/96, § 120, ECHR 2000-I; Öneryıldız v. Turkey [GC], no. 48939/99, § 128, ECHR 2004-XII; Megadat.com S.r.l. v. Moldova, no. 21151/04, § 72, 8 April 2008; and Rysovskyy v. Ukraine, no. 29979/04, § 71, 20 October 2011). It is desirable that public authorities act with the utmost care, in particular when dealing with matters of vital importance to individuals, such as welfare benefits and other such rights. In the present case, the Court considers that having discovered their mistake, the authorities failed in their duty to act speedily and in an appropriate and consistent manner (see Moskal, cited above, § 72). The initial decision to grant the applicant an early-retirement pension appears to have been taken lightly and without appropriate checks having been first undertaken.

62. In the Court's opinion, the fact that the State did not ask the applicant to return the pension which had been unduly paid (see paragraph 54 above) did not mitigate sufficiently the consequences for the applicant flowing from the interference in her case.

63. It should also be observed that as a result of the impugned measure, the applicant was faced, without any transitional period enabling her to adjust to the new situation, with the total loss of her early-retirement pension, which constituted her main source of income. Moreover, the Court is aware of the potential risk that, in view of her age and the economic reality in the country, particularly in the undeveloped Podkarpacki region, the applicant might have considerable difficulty in securing new employment. Indeed up to day the applicant has not been able to find an employment (see paragraph 18 above).

64. The Government further maintained that the applicant's little farm might have been a source of income for her. However, they failed to submit any evidence that after the revocation of the EWK pension she indeed derived any income from the farm. Moreover, the farm clearly did not constitute her main source of income, since she had been employed outside the farm in a non-agricultural enterprise.

In so far as the Government listed various benefits available in Poland, the Court considers that they have failed to specify which of those benefits, if any, were available in the applicant's situation. It should be noted that the applicant submitted that she had not been eligible to apply for any welfare benefits.

65. In view of the above considerations, the Court does not see any reason to depart from its ruling in the leading case concerning EWK pensions, Moskal v. Poland, and finds that in the instant case a fair balance has not been struck between the demands of the general interest of the public and the requirements of the protection of the individual's fundamental rights and that the burden placed on the applicant was excessive.

66. It follows that there has been a violation of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention.

II. ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF ARTICLES 6 § 1 AND 8 OF THE CONVENTION

67. The applicant also alleged that the ex officio reopening of the social security proceedings, which had resulted in the quashing of the final decision granting her a right to a pension, was in breach of the principle of legal certainty under Article 6 § 1 of the Convention.

She also complained under Article 8 of the Convention of an interference with her right to respect for her private and family life in that by divesting her of the EWK pension the authorities had deprived her of her sole source of income and therefore financial resources indispensable for her livelihood.

68. The Court notes that these complaints are linked to the one examined above and must therefore likewise be declared admissible.

69. However, having regard to the reasons which led the Court to find a violation of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention, the Court finds that the applicant's complaints under Articles 6 and 8 of the Convention do not require a separate examination (see Moskal, cited above, §§ 83 and 94).

III. REMAINING COMPLAINTS

70. Lastly, the applicant alleged a breach of Article 13 of the Convention and Article 2 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention. However, in the light of all the material in its possession, and in so far as the matters complained of are within its competence, the Court finds that they do not disclose any appearance of a violation of the rights and freedoms set out in the Convention or its Protocols.

It follows that this part of the application is manifestly ill-founded and must be rejected in accordance with Article 35 §§ 3 (a) and 4 of the Convention.

IV. APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 41 OF THE CONVENTION

71. Article 41 of the Convention provides:

“If the Court finds that there has been a violation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, and if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made, the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party.”

A. Damage

72. The applicant claimed 90,000 euros (EUR) in respect of both pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage.

73. The Government contested the claim.

74. The Court finds that the applicant was deprived of her income in connection with the violation found and must take into account the fact that she undoubtedly suffered some pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage (see Koua Poirrez, cited above, § 70). Making an assessment on an equitable basis, as is required by Article 41 of the Convention, and taking into account in particular the amount of the pension involved and the difficulty in finding employment after the pension was stopped, the Court awards the applicant EUR 6,000 to cover all heads of damage.

B. Costs and expenses

75. The applicant also claimed EUR 2,500 for the costs and expenses incurred before the domestic courts and the Court.

76. The Government contested the claim.

77. According to the Court’s case-law, an applicant is entitled to the reimbursement of costs and expenses only in so far as it has been shown that these have been actually and necessarily incurred and are reasonable as to quantum. In the present case, regard being had to the documents in its possession and the above criteria, the Court rejects the claim.

C. Default interest

78. The Court considers it appropriate that the default interest rate should be based on the marginal lending rate of the European Central Bank, to which should be added three percentage points.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE COURT

1. Declares unanimously the complaints under Articles 6 and 8 of the Convention and Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention admissible and the remainder of the application inadmissible;
2. Holds by six votes to one that there has been a violation of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1 to the Convention;
3. Holds unanimously that it is not necessary to examine separately the applicant's complaints under Articles 6 and 8 of the Convention;
4. Holds by six votes to one
 - (a) that the respondent State is to pay the applicant, within three months from the date on which the judgment becomes final in accordance with Article 44 § 2 of the Convention, the amount of EUR 6,000 (six thousand euros), plus any tax that may be chargeable, in respect of both pecuniary and non-pecuniary damage to be converted into the currency of the respondent State at the rate applicable at the date of settlement;
 - (b) that from the expiry of the above-mentioned three months until settlement simple interest shall be payable on the above amount at a rate equal to the marginal lending rate of the European Central Bank during the default period plus three percentage points;
5. Dismisses unanimously the remainder of the applicant's claim for just satisfaction.

Done in English, and notified in writing on 4 December 2012, pursuant to Rule 77 §§ 2 and 3 of the Rules of Court.

F.A.

PARTLY DISSENTING OPINION OF JUDGE HIRVELÄ

To my regret, I am unable to agree with the majority in this and the other eleven cases (8578/04, 18683/04, 27680/04, 31803/04, 34386/04, 35538/04, 39430/04, 6112/05, 39225/05, 11815/05, 10368/05 and 31492/05) examined simultaneously on the same day by the Court. This case and the other cases are based on the same or at least very similar circumstances as in Moskal v. Poland (no. 10373/05, 15 September 2009) and Lewandowski v. Poland (no. 38459/03, 2 October 2012) as regards the revocation of the early retirement pension (the EWK pension) following a review of the applicant's dossier.

The reasons for my dissent are identical to those expressed in the joint partly dissenting opinion which I expressed together with Judges Bratza and Bianku in the leading case of Moskal v. Poland and later in the dissenting opinion which Judge Bianku and I expressed in Lewandowski v. Poland and other cases examined by the Court together with Lewandowski.

To avoid repetition, I refer to the arguments and reasons set out in the above-mentioned dissenting opinions to conclude that there has been no violation of Article 1 of Protocol No. 1. Like the majority of the Chamber, I do not consider that the complaints under Articles 6 and 8 require a separate examination.
