
EUROPEAN COURT OF HUMAN RIGHTS
COUR EUROPÉENNE DES DROITS DE L'HOMME

FIFTH SECTION

CASE OF JEVŠNIK v. SLOVENIA

(Application no. 5747/10)

JUDGMENT

STRASBOURG

9 January 2014

This judgment is final but it may be subject to editorial revision.

In the case of Jevšnik v. Slovenia,

The European Court of Human Rights (Fifth Section), sitting as a Committee composed of:

Ann Power-Forde, President,
Boštjan M. Zupančič,
Helena Jäderblom, judges,
and Stephen Phillips, Deputy Section Registrar,

Having deliberated in private on 3 December 2013,

Delivers the following judgment, which was adopted on that date:

PROCEDURE

1. The case originated in an application (no. 5747/10) against the Republic of Slovenia lodged with the Court under Article 34 of the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms ("the Convention") by a Slovenian national, Mr Marko Jevšnik ("the applicant"), on 18 December 2009.

2. The applicant was represented by Odvetniška Družba Matoz O.P. D.O.O., a law firm practising in Koper. The Slovenian Government ("the Government") were represented by their Agents, Mrs T. Mihelič Žitko and Mrs N. Pintar Gosenca, State Attorneys.

3. The applicant alleged, in particular, that the conditions of his detention in Ljubljana prison amounted to a violation of Articles 3 and 8 of the Convention, and that he had no effective remedy in this regard as required by Article 13 of the Convention.

4. On 27 April 2010 the Court decided to give notice of the application to the Government. It also decided to rule on the admissibility and merits of the application at the same time (Article 29 § 1) and to give priority to it under Rule 41 of the Rules of the Court.

THE FACTS

I. THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE CASE

5. The applicant was born in 1985 and lives in Brestanica.

6. The applicant served his prison sentence in the semi-open and closed sections of Ljubljana prison in the period between 21 July 2009 and 24 December 2009. On the latter date he was transferred to Celje prison, where he stayed until his conditional release on 31 May 2010. The transfer was made on the basis of a decision issued by the director-general of the General Administration at the request of the governor of Ljubljana prison. The decision cited overcrowding as the ground for the transfer.

The applicant's complaints relate to the conditions of detention in Ljubljana prison only.

7. From 21 July 2009 to 25 October 2009 he was held in the semi-open section in cell 146 (third floor) measuring 18.8 square metres (including a separate 1.72 square metre sanitary facility). From 25 October 2009 to 4 November 2009 and from 10 December 2009 to 24 December 2009 he was held in the semi-open section in cell 138 (third floor) measuring 18.6 square metres (including a separate 1.72 square metre sanitary facility). Due to drug problems he was temporarily held from 4 November 2009 to 10 December 2009 in the closed section in cell 7 (third floor) measuring 16.8 square metres (including a separate 1.72 square metre sanitary facility). All the cells contained, apart from the furniture, five sleeping places (two bunk beds and one single bed). According to the applicant, five prisoners were being held in each of the cells during his detention. The Government, however, submitted that the number varied between four and five. Each cell had one 107 x 110 cm double casement window, which the prisoners could freely open or close.

8. During his imprisonment the applicant had twelve consultations with a general practitioner and six dental appointments. He attended several interviews and group sessions with a pedagogue.

9. As regards the general characteristics of the cells, material conditions inside the cells, sanitary conditions and health care, see the judgment in Štrucl and Others v. Slovenia, nos. 5903/10, 6003/10 and 6544/10, §§ 21 to 32, 20 October 2011.

10. As to the out-of-cell time in the closed section, the Court found in the aforementioned judgment that sentenced prisoners in the closed section of the prison were locked up in their cells and were only able to leave them if they applied for certain activities, most of which were to take place in the recreation room. There was, however, only one 50-square-metre recreation room per floor, which was to be used by ten inmates at most (Štrucl and Others § 86).

11. As to the out-of-cell time in the semi-open section, the Government submitted that the cell doors in the semi-open section of the prison were unlocked, except from 9.45 p.m. (on Fridays, Saturdays and before holidays from midnight) until 6.00 a.m. (on Saturdays, Sundays and during holidays until 8.30 a.m.). During this time prisoners could move freely in the corridor (35.7 square metre), living quarters of co-prisoners or in the indoor or outdoor exercise areas, in accordance with prison rules. The Government alleged that this regime had been in place for several years.

12. As regards the cell temperature, the data provided by the Government showed that the average temperature in the cells in the late afternoon (5- 5.30 p.m.) in the second half of July and August 2009 had been approximately 28°C, exceeding 30°C on seven days.

II. RELEVANT DOMESTIC LAW AND PRACTICE AND RELEVANT INTERNATIONAL DOCUMENTS

13. For the relevant domestic law and practice as well as relevant international documents see Štrucl and Others, cited above, §§ 33-56.

THE LAW

I. ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 3 OF THE CONVENTION

14. The applicant complained that the conditions of his detention in Ljubljana prison amounted to a violation of Article 3 of the Convention. In particular, he complained of severe overcrowding which had led to a lack of personal space, poor sanitary conditions and inadequate ventilation, as well as excessive restriction on out-of-cell time, high temperatures in the cells, inadequate health care and psychiatric support and exposure to violence from other inmates due to insufficient security.

15. He submitted that the situation amounted to a structural problem, and that this has been acknowledged by the domestic authorities.

16. The applicant also complained about restrictions on visits, telephone conversations and correspondence. However, these complaints fall to be examined under Article 8 of the Convention only.

Article 3 of the Convention reads as follows:

> "No one shall be subjected to torture or to inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment."

A. Admissibility

1. Complaint relating to physical conditions of detention

17. As in the case of Štrucl and Others and Praznik v. Slovenia, no. 6234/10, 28 June 2012 the Government raised an objection of non-exhaustion of domestic remedies, relying on the same arguments as in the above cases. In Štrucl and Others the Court joined the issue of exhaustion of domestic remedies to the merits of the complaint under Article 13 of the Convention. After finding a violation of the latter provision it rejected the Government's objection (§§ 62 and 98-113). The Court sees no reason to reach a different conclusion in the present case. It further finds that this complaint is not manifestly ill-founded within the meaning of Article 35

§ 3 (a) of the Convention nor is it inadmissible on any other grounds. It should therefore be declared admissible.

2. Complaints relating to inadequate health care and psychiatric support and insufficient security measures

18. The parties in the present case adduced the same arguments as in Štrucl and Others, where the Court found the part of the application concerning inadequate health care, psychiatric support and insufficient security measures manifestly ill-founded (§§ 63-69). The Court decided the same in Praznik. In the absence of any reasons that would lead the Court to reach a different conclusion in the present case, the Court finds these complaints to be manifestly ill-founded and should therefore be rejected pursuant to Article 35 §§ 3 (a) and 4 of the Convention.

B. Merits

19. The parties relied on the same arguments as in the case of Štrucl and Others (cited above, §§ 70-79).

20. The Court refers as regards the relevant principles to paragraphs 72-76 of its judgment in the case of Mandić and Jović v. Slovenia, nos. 5774/10 and 5985/10, 20 October 2011.

21. The Court notes that the applicant was held in Ljubljana prison in the semi-open and the closed sections. From 21 July 2009 to 4 November 2009 and from 10 December 2009 to 24 December 2009 he was held in the semi-open section in two different cells with four other prisoners, with about 3.4 and 3.3 square metres of personal space, respectively. From 4 November 2009 to 10 December 2009 he was held in the closed section in a cell with four other prisoners, with about 3 square metres of personal space. This space was further reduced by the amount of furniture (see Modarca v. Moldova, no. 14437/05, § 63, 10 May 2007). As regards the Government's suggestion that not all the beds in the cells were occupied all the time, the Court has already rejected it, finding that no official documents indicating the exact number of prisoners being held in a particular cell had been provided to substantiate it (see Štrucl and Others, cited above, § 81).

22. It was found in Praznik that the personal space of the applicant, which was for most of the period of his detention in the closed section about 3.3 square metres, and which was slightly larger than the space available to the prisoners in Štrucl and Others, still fell short of the recommendation of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture and Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. It was further found in Praznik that the applicant's situation was exacerbated by the very limited time which could be spent outside the cell and by high temperatures in the cell in the summer (see Praznik, cited above, § 20) therefore, it was concluded that the conditions of detention were contrary to Article 3 of the Convention.

23. Likewise, in the present case the applicant was detained in the closed section for thirty-six days with about 3 square metres of personal space and his situation was further exacerbated by the very limited time which could be spent outside the cell. Having regard to the cumulative effects of these conditions of the applicant's detention, the Court considers, as in Praznik, that the hardship he endured appears to have exceeded the unavoidable level inherent in detention, and finds that the resulting suffering went beyond the threshold of severity under Article 3 of the Convention (see, Praznik, cited above, § 21 and mutatis mutandis, Szél v. Hungary, no. 30221/06, § 18, 7 June 2011, and Peers v. Greece, no. 28524/95, § 75, ECHR 2001-III).

24. The Court therefore finds that the conditions of detention of the applicant in the closed section were contrary to Article 3 of the Convention.

25. However, while the applicant was held in the semi-open section with about 3.3 or 3.4 square metres of personal space, he could move freely, in accordance with prison rules, in the corridor, living quarters of co-prisoners or in the indoor or outdoor exercise areas of the prison. In some cases the Court found no violation of Article 3 as the restricted space in the sleeping facilities was compensated by the freedom of movement enjoyed by the detainees during the day-time (see Valašinas v. Lithuania, no. 44558/98, §§ 103 and 107, ECHR 2001-VIII and Nurmagomedov v. Russia (dec.), no. 30138/02, 16 September 2004). According to the regime implemented in practice in the prison, the applicant was allowed to spend from Monday to Thursday fifteen hours and forty five minutes per day outside his cell, on Fridays eighteen hours, on Saturdays fifteen hours and a half and on Sundays thirteen hours and fifteen minutes. As regards high temperatures in cells in the summer of 2009 (see Štrucl and Others, cited above, § 87), the Court finds that although the applicant was imprisoned also in the second half of July and August 2009, his situation during that period cannot be considered as being further exacerbated by high temperatures as he was held in the semi-open section and could therefore spent a considerable amount of time outside the cell.

26. The Court therefore concludes that the conditions in which the applicant was held in the semi-open section, personal space taken together with the time he could spend outside the cell, could not be considered as to be contrary to Article 3 of the Convention.

II. ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 8 OF THE CONVENTION

27. The applicant complained that his allegations in respect of Article 3 also gave rise to a violation of Article 8 of the Convention. In addition, he complained about restrictions on visits and telephone calls. As regards the latter, the applicant submitted that he had often been under pressure from other inmates to terminate his telephone conversations before the allotted time had expired. He also alleged that his correspondence had been limited to certain identified people.

28. Article 8 of the Convention reads as follows:

> "1. Everyone has the right to respect for his private and family life, his home and his correspondence.
> 2. There shall be no interference by a public authority with the exercise of this right except such as is in accordance with the law and is necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security, public safety or the economic well-being of the country, for the prevention of disorder or crime, for the protection of health or morals, or for the protection of the rights and freedoms of others."

29. As already found in Praznik, the Court notes that in so far as the complaints under Article 8 overlap with those under Article 3 they should be for the same reasons and to the same extent declared admissible. However, in view of the applicant's submissions and having regard to the finding relating to Article 3, the Court considers that no separate issue arises under Article 8 in this regard (see Orchowski v. Poland, no. 17885/04, § 198, ECHR 2009-... (extracts)).

30. As regards the applicant's complaints concerning his contact with persons outside the prison, the Court notes that the parties adduced the same arguments as in the case of Štrucl and Others. In the latter case the Court found that these complaints were unsubstantiated (cited above, §§ 96-97). The Court sees no reason to reach a different conclusion in the present case. These complaints should therefore be rejected as manifestly ill-founded, pursuant to Article 35 §§ 3 (a) and 4 of the Convention.

III. ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ARTICLE 13 OF THE CONVENTION

31. The applicant complained that owing to the systemic nature of the inadequate prison conditions he did not have any effective remedy at his disposal as regards his complaints under Articles 3 and 8 of the Convention. In any event, there is no evidence that the remedies which were available in theory could work effectively in practice when it came to prison conditions and the treatment of prisoners. He cited Article 13 of the Convention, which reads as follows:

> "Everyone whose rights and freedoms as set forth in [the] Convention are violated shall have an effective remedy before a national authority notwithstanding that the violation has been committed by persons acting in an official capacity."

A. Admissibility

32. In so far as the applicant's complaint under Article 13 of the Convention refers to the lack of effective remedies in respect of inadequate physical conditions of detention, as already found by the Court in Štrucl and Others and Praznik, this aspect of the complaint is not manifestly ill-founded within the meaning of Article 35 § 3 (a) of the Convention nor inadmissible on any other grounds. It must therefore be declared admissible.

33. As to the lack of effective remedies in respect of the allegedly inadequate medical and psychological care, inadequate security measures and the restrictions on maintaining contact with people outside the prison, having declared the relevant issues under Articles 3 and 8 of the Convention inadmissible, the Court concludes that the applicant have no arguable claim for the purpose of Article 13 of the Convention (see Visloguzov v. Ukraine, no. 32362/02, §§ 74-5, 20 May 2010). It follows that this aspect of the applicant's complaint under Article 13 of the Convention should be rejected as manifestly ill-founded, pursuant to Article 35 §§ 3 (a) and 4 of the Convention.

B. Merits

34. The parties' arguments are identical to those in the case of Štrucl and Others (§§ 101-117) in which the Court found that none of the remedies relied on by the Government could be regarded with a sufficient degree of certainty as constituting an effective remedy for the applicants (ibid., §§ 118-33). Since there appear to be no reasons to reach a different conclusion in the present case, the Court finds that there has been a violation of Article 13 of the Convention on account of the lack of an effective and accessible remedy under domestic law for the applicant's complaints in respect of the conditions of his detention.

IV. APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 46 OF THE CONVENTION

35. Article 46 of the Convention provides:

> "1. The High Contracting Parties undertake to abide by the final judgment of the Court in any case to which they are parties.
> 2. The final judgment of the Court shall be transmitted to the Committee of Ministers, which shall supervise its execution."

36. The applicant argued that his allegations related to a structural problem of overcrowding in Slovenian prisons. This assertion was disputed by the Government.

37. The parties' arguments are identical to those in the case of Štrucl and Others. In the latter case the Court emphasized the need to take steps to reduce the number of prisoners in Ljubljana prison (ibid., §§ 137-141). In view of the fact that the applicant's complaint of a structural problem applies to the same period of time that was addressed in Štrucl and others (2009), the Court considers that it raises no separate issue which would call for an examination under Article 46 in the present case, as well as in all future cases regarding the same issue, which cover the problem of overcrowding in Ljubljana prison in the period between 2008 and 2010.

V. APPLICATION OF ARTICLE 41 OF THE CONVENTION

38. Article 41 of the Convention provides:

> "If the Court finds that there has been a violation of the Convention or the Protocols thereto, and if the internal law of the High Contracting Party concerned allows only partial reparation to be made, the Court shall, if necessary, afford just satisfaction to the injured party."

A. Damage

39. The applicant claimed 15,000 euros (EUR) in respect of non-pecuniary damage.

40. The Government contested the claim.

41. The Court awards the applicant EUR 1,200 in respect of non-pecuniary damage.

B. Costs and expenses

42. The applicant also claimed EUR 1,520 for costs and expenses incurred before the Court. This sum consisted of EUR 1,500 in lawyer's fees, which he claimed were calculated on the basis of statutory domestic rates and EUR 20 for material expenses.

43. The Government argued that this claim was excessive. They also argued that the Court should take into account the fact that the applicant's representative was representing a number of other applicants before the Court and had submitted almost identical pleadings in all these cases.

44. According to the Court's case-law, an applicant is entitled to the reimbursement of costs and expenses only in so far as it has been shown that these have been actually and necessarily incurred and are reasonable as to quantum. With regard to an applicant's Convention costs, the Court reiterates that it does not consider itself bound by domestic scales and practices, although it may derive some assistance from them (see, among many other authorities, Gaspari v. Slovenia, no. 21055/03, § 83, 21 July 2009, and Başkaya and Okçuoğlu v. Turkey [GC], nos. 23536/94 and 24408/94, § 98, ECHR 1999-IV). In the present case, regard being had to the information in its possession and in particular the fact that the law firm representing the applicant has already been reimbursed in six other cases for preparation of submissions almost identical to the present ones (see Mandić and Jović, cited above, §§ 133-35, Štrucl and Others, cited above, §§ 146-48 and Praznik, cited above §§ 38-40), the Court considers it reasonable to award the sum of EUR 500 to cover the costs of the proceedings before the Court.

C. Default interest

45. The Court considers it appropriate that the default interest rate should be based on the marginal lending rate of the European Central Bank, to which should be added three percentage points.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE COURT UNANIMOUSLY

1. Declares the complaint concerning the physical conditions of detention under Articles 3 and 8 of the Convention, as well as the complaint under Article 13 of the Convention relating to the complaint concerning the physical conditions of detention, admissible and the remainder of the application inadmissible;

2. Holds that there has been a violation of Article 3 of the Convention as regards the detention in the closed section;

3. Holds that there has been no violation of Article 3 of the Convention as regards the detention in the semi-open section;

4. Holds that there is no need to examine the complaint concerning the physical conditions of detention under Article 8 of the Convention;

5. Holds that there has been a violation of Article 13 of the Convention;

6. Holds
   (a) that the respondent State is to pay the applicant, within three months of the date on which the judgment becomes final in accordance with Article 44 § 2 of the Convention, the following amounts:
      (i) EUR 1,200 (one thousand two hundred euros), plus any tax that may be chargeable, in respect of non-pecuniary damage;
      (iii) EUR 500 (five hundred euros), plus any tax that may be chargeable to the applicant, in respect of costs and expenses;
   (b) that from the expiry of the above-mentioned three months until settlement simple interest shall be payable on the above amounts at a rate equal to the marginal lending rate of the European Central Bank during the default period plus three percentage points;

7. Dismisses the remainder of the applicant's claim for just satisfaction.

Done in English, and notified in writing on 9 January 2014, pursuant to Rule 77 §§ 2 and 3 of the Rules of Court.
