

Grand Chamber Panel's decisions

At its last meeting (Monday 13 October 2014), the Grand Chamber panel of five judges decided to refer one case and to reject requests to refer 21 other cases¹.

The following case has been referred to the Grand Chamber of the European Court of Human Rights.

Couderc and Hachette Filipacchi Associés v. France (application no. 40454/07): which concerns the judgment against the weekly magazine Paris-Match for publishing information on the private life of Prince Albert of Monaco.

Referral accepted

Couderc and Hachette Filipacchi Associés v. France \(application no. 40454/07\)

The applicants are Anne-Marie Couderc, a French national born in 1950 and the publication director of the weekly magazine Paris-Match, and the company Hachette Filipacchi Associés, which publishes the magazine.

On 3 May 2005 the English newspaper the Daily Mail published claims by Ms C. that Albert Grimaldi, the reigning Prince of Monaco, was the father of her son. The newspaper reproduced the main points of an article due to be published in Paris-Match. Prince Albert of Monaco, having learnt that an article was about to appear in Paris-Match, served notice on the applicants to refrain from publishing the article. The magazine went ahead and published the article, together with photographs showing the Prince with the child, which appeared simultaneously in the German weekly magazine Bunte.

On 19 May 2005 Prince Albert of Monaco brought proceedings against the applicants in the Nanterre tribunal de grande instance on the basis of Article 8 (right to respect for private and family life) of the European Convention on Human Rights and Articles 9 and 1382 of the Civil Code.

On 29 June 2005 the court awarded Prince Albert 50,000 euros (EUR) in damages and ordered details of the judgment to be printed in a full-page feature on the front cover of Paris-Match, under the title "Court order made against Paris-Match at the request of Prince Albert II of Monaco" (« Condamnation judiciaire de Paris-Match à la demande du prince Albert II de Monaco »). The court ruled that the judgment was to be immediately enforceable. It considered that the whole article and the accompanying pictures came within the most intimate sphere of the Prince's emotional and family life and were not apt to be the subject of any debate of general interest.

The applicants appealed and obtained a suspension of the judgment's immediate enforceability.

On 6 July 2005 the Prince issued a statement in which he publicly acknowledged that the child was his. The Court of Appeal gave judgment on 24 November 2005, finding that the article in Paris-Match had caused irreversible damage to the Prince, as the fact that he was the child's father, which had remained secret until publication of the article, had suddenly become public knowledge, against his wishes. The Court of Appeal upheld the award of EUR 50,000 for damages and altered the conditions of the order for publication, ruling that the statement should appear without a title, occupying only one third of the front cover.

Alleging a violation of Article 10 (freedom of expression) of the European Convention on Human Rights, the applicants lodged an appeal on points of law, which was dismissed.

In Germany, the urgent application lodged by Prince Albert of Monaco against the magazine Bunte was dismissed in a judgment that was subsequently upheld by the Court of Appeal. The German courts gave precedence to the public's right to be informed over the Prince's interest in protection of his private life. They considered that the question of a possible male heir was of decisive importance in a hereditary monarchy and that it was for the child's mother and not for the Prince, who had not acknowledged paternity, to decide whether the disclosure of the child's existence fell within the protected private sphere.

Relying on Article 10 of the European Convention, the applicants allege that the judgment against them amounts to unjustified interference with the exercise of their right to freedom of information.

In its Chamber judgment of 12 June 2014, the European Court of Human Rights held, by four votes to three, that there had been a violation of Article 10 of the Convention. The Court found that the judgment against the applicants had made no distinction between information which formed part of a debate of general interest and that which merely reported details of the private life of the Prince of Monaco. Nor did the case simply concern a dispute between the press and a public figure; the interests of Ms C. and the child in asserting his existence and having his identity recognised had also been at stake. In the Court's view, there was no reasonable relationship of proportionality between the restrictions imposed on the right to freedom of expression and the protection of the reputation and rights of others.

On 13 October 2014 the case was referred to the Grand Chamber at the request of the French Government.
